

【Course Description】

The contents of this course include roughly two parts. Part 1 will give students a broad outline of contemporary international law. Then Part 2 will focus the topics in East and Southeast Asia region from the perspective of international law.

【Class Goals】

Students are expected to understand the basic conception and fundamental system of international law and can focus the practical issues in international relations from the perspective of international law.

【Course Schedule】

- 【第1回】Introduction
- 【第2回】Historical development of international law
- 【第3回】States and international law
- 【第4回】Use of Force, war in international law
- 【第5回】Peace keeping and international law
- 【第6回】Human rights in international law
- 【第7回】International criminal law
- 【第8回】International law in East Asia: a historical perspective
- 【第9回】Legal issues on the Mainland-Taiwan relation
- 【第10回】Legal issues on the Korean Peninsula
- 【第11回】Territorial and marine disputes in East Asia
- 【第12回】Territorial and marine disputes in Southeast Asia
- 【第13回】Japan-U.S.A. alliance and international law
- 【第14回】Japan and United Nations
- 【第15回】Regionalism, Integration in East and Southeast Asia

【Preparation for Class】

Students should read 20~30 pages text or other paper for every week's lesson, also should submit an assignment before lesson.

【Review of Class】

Students should submit an additional assignment occasionally after lesson.

【Remarks for Class】

Prerequisites:[KC 2105 International Law] or Consent of Instructor. All students must formally be registered.

【Texts】

Basak Cali, International Law for International Relations, Oxford University Press, 2010. Additional materials and references will be distributed in class.

【Reference Books】

Nisuke Ando ed., Japan and International Law, Kluwer, 1999.

【Evaluation Criteria】

Class participation (include oral presentation) 50%, short paper 50%.

【Notes】